

Gameplay terms

This document is intended to list the various Anglo-Saxon (Old English) game-play terms associated with Mærstánas.

heorr (pl. heorras) “hinge”, refers to the connection a stone has with an adjacent stone or with the edge of the board fræcenes “danger, peril”, the state of having four hinges; stones may not be played where they would be in this state or would cause any adjacent stones to be in this state freóndlic heorr (pl. freóndlic heorras) “friendly hinge”, these are used in calculating each player’s score mærstán (pl. mærstánas) “boundary stone”, the game derives its name from this term because of the adjacent nature in which stones are scored stán (pl. stánas) “stone”, the game is literally played with stones of different colors tæfl “board”, used for playing Mærstánas similar to the one used in the game of Hnefetafl

Porn “thorn” or “Thor” rune, associated with brute force

Punor-stán “thunder-stone”, so named because of its devastating power when placed next to adjacent stones
